STORY OF THE SPECTACLE.

"The play's the thing, wherein I'll catch
The conscience of the King." — Hamlet.

KING DECIUS, the storm king, while passing through his kingdom one day, discovers in the hut of an old witch a beautiful orphan girl, whom he adopts, and giving her the name of Neyera, decrees that she shall succeed him to his crown and kingdom. Between the clans of King Decius and Prince Juna, who are both subjects of Zephra, the Queen of Myth, there has existed for years a bitter feud, but Juna, being a true type of noble manhood, endeavors to effect a reconciliation with the haughty Decius; but each overture is repulsed, until at last the doughty Prince dons disguise, enters the storm king's castle, determined to so ingratiate himself into his affection as to win his favor. He fails in this, but instead meets the beautiful Neyera, who has now grown to be a handsome maiden. He wins the promise of her hand in marriage, goes back to his own country, and at the grand annual fete of the Queen, at which time are held all the dances, games and revels of the Queen's subjects, he presents himself at court and demands the hand of Neyera in marriage. Enraged at this, Decius banishes away the Princess to the ice caves of Norseland. Juna is acquainted of this by the fairy godmother of Neyera. He hastens to Zephra, obtains assistance from her, and after many perilous attempts, rescues the Princess from her captors, and reveals the perfidy of Decius to the Queen, who banishes him forever from her presence.
